LTC ENGINEERING STUDENTS BUILD BIKES

Two teams of graduating students from all three Mechanical Majors in the LTC Mechanical Engineering Technology Program joined together recently to build two chain saw motor powered bikes. The students modeled industry by using people with different specialties to complete the project. Mechanical majors performed analysis work to design the product and determine its capabilities; design majors produced detailed drawings; and manufacturing majors actually manufactured and built the machines. The bikes each weighed less than 50 pounds and fit into a suitcase for easy transportation. The teams had a competition in June to see which team could have each member take the bike out of the suitcase, ride a specified distance, and return the bike to the suitcase the fastest.

OSU LIMA EDUCATION STUDENTS PARTICIPATE IN READING CLINIC

A group of Ohio State Lima Education majors spent part of their summer teaching in an unusual reading clinic located at a Lima area subsidized housing complex. Forty five children ranging in age from kindergarten through 8th grade completed the reading sessions as well as writing assignments. The student teachers were enrolled in scheduled classes on the campus and received college credit for the program. Altrusa International provided $500 to buy books and supplies for the program.
